INDIGENOUS PEOPLES OF NORTH AMERICA
Gale Primary Sources

Promoting critical inquiry into the culture and heritage of indigenous peoples
Indigenous Peoples of North America, Part I fortifies more general secondary historical resources by providing an opportunity for students to dig into the past and explore the ideas and cultures that have defined indigenous societies, tribal organisations, and Native-European relations.

Content has been sourced from both American and Canadian institutions and has received direct-from-source permission to digitise newspapers from various tribes and organisations. This archive also features indigenous language materials, including dictionaries, religious texts, and primers.

Indigenous Peoples of North America, Part II: The Indian Rights Association, 1882–1986, the most recent installment, expands upon Part I. The second installment provides the complete papers of the first organisation to address Native American interests and rights. It contains incoming and outgoing correspondence; organisational records; printed material, including early pamphlets and publications both by the Indian Rights Association and other Native American and Native American–related organizations; Indian Rights Association annual reports; draft legislation; administrative files; news clippings; and the papers of Indian Rights Association founder Herbert Welsh. Student researchers can access numerous photographs, mainly from Western field trips; materials from the Council on Indian Affairs; and manuscripts and research notes regarding social and cultural traditions.

Indigenous Peoples of North America thoughtfully illustrates and contextualises the story of indigenous peoples in the United States and Canada with a depth and breadth of content that is unprecedented. Located on the Gale Primary Sources platform, both parts offer users an appealing search experience and enable intelligent inquiry into the culture and heritage of indigenous peoples.
MEET INTERDISCIPLINARY NEEDS

Native Studies, like other community-focused programs, is cross-disciplinary by nature. It draws in scholars of history, law, economics, psychology, public health, sociology, anthropology, religion, and a wide array of other disciplines, allowing student researchers across departments to utilise Gale primary source content within their dedicated areas of study.

OFFER RARE & COMPLETE CONTENT SETS ON THE WORK OF KEY ORGANISATIONS

In Part I, scholars will find the papers, publications, and subject files of the Association on American Indian Affairs, founded in 1922, available to research. Alongside the papers in Part II of the Indian Rights Association, founded in 1882, student researchers can compare and contrast the work of two of the earliest leading organisations to represent Native American interests and explore the vast array of issues they represented. With Indigenous Peoples of North America, parts I and II, these and smaller organisations become far more accessible to researchers who want to grasp the roles played by advocacy groups in advancing Native interests.

FOCUS ON SOCIAL JUSTICE

Indigenous rights, along with the rights of other underrepresented groups, are still in jeopardy. Currently, Native American citizens face increasing pressure from the exploitation of natural resources on Native American lands to the passage of recent voter ID laws. This series sheds light on the challenges we face today by underscoring through key primary sources the centuries of exploitation experienced by indigenous communities in the past.

PROVIDE REPRESENTATION FOR UNDERREPRESENTED PEOPLE

Digital research collections devoted to the history of twentieth-century Native American life can be rare and hard to come by, often resulting in incomplete portraits of the past. This series remedies the problem by making these modern primary sources available.

SUPPORT GROWING RESEARCH-AREA INTERESTS

Native Studies is a growing field of study, as more students and scholars engage in research of indigenous communities. The addition of Native American and Indigenous Studies programs, increase in faculty appointments, and tripling in conference attendance of the Native American and Indigenous Studies Association over the last decade attest to the steady growth of this field of academic study.

Sir:
I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that you desire to visit the Chiricahua Apache prisoners in Florida with a view to ascertain whether some practical steps can be taken towards putting the younger men, the women and children of this tribe in the way of becoming self-supporting, and requesting that Captain John S. Bourke, 3th Cavalry, be detailed to accompany you on the proposed journey.

In reply I beg to state that as this journey does not appear to be a stricky military matter,
