in the dock at Linslade, Bucks ... accused of receiving £835. She stood with her hands in the pockets of her black, fur-collared coat. She glanced across the courtroom—and smiled at a red-haired woman. Another glance at the redhead. This time a wink, too. Then the magistrate, farmer Walter Leach, took his seat. The court was in session. ... The defence counsel, Mr. Wilfred Fordham, fought to get bail for "this woman who went to Scotland Yard to face allegations made against her."

The plea was refused. Soon afterwards, Mary Manson was hidden under the blanket once more ... on her way to London and a two-day remand in Holloway Jail.

Today Wilson will appear at Linslade court, four miles from the scene of the robbery.

Before Wilson was arrested yesterday, his photograph and those of two other men were issued by the Yard.

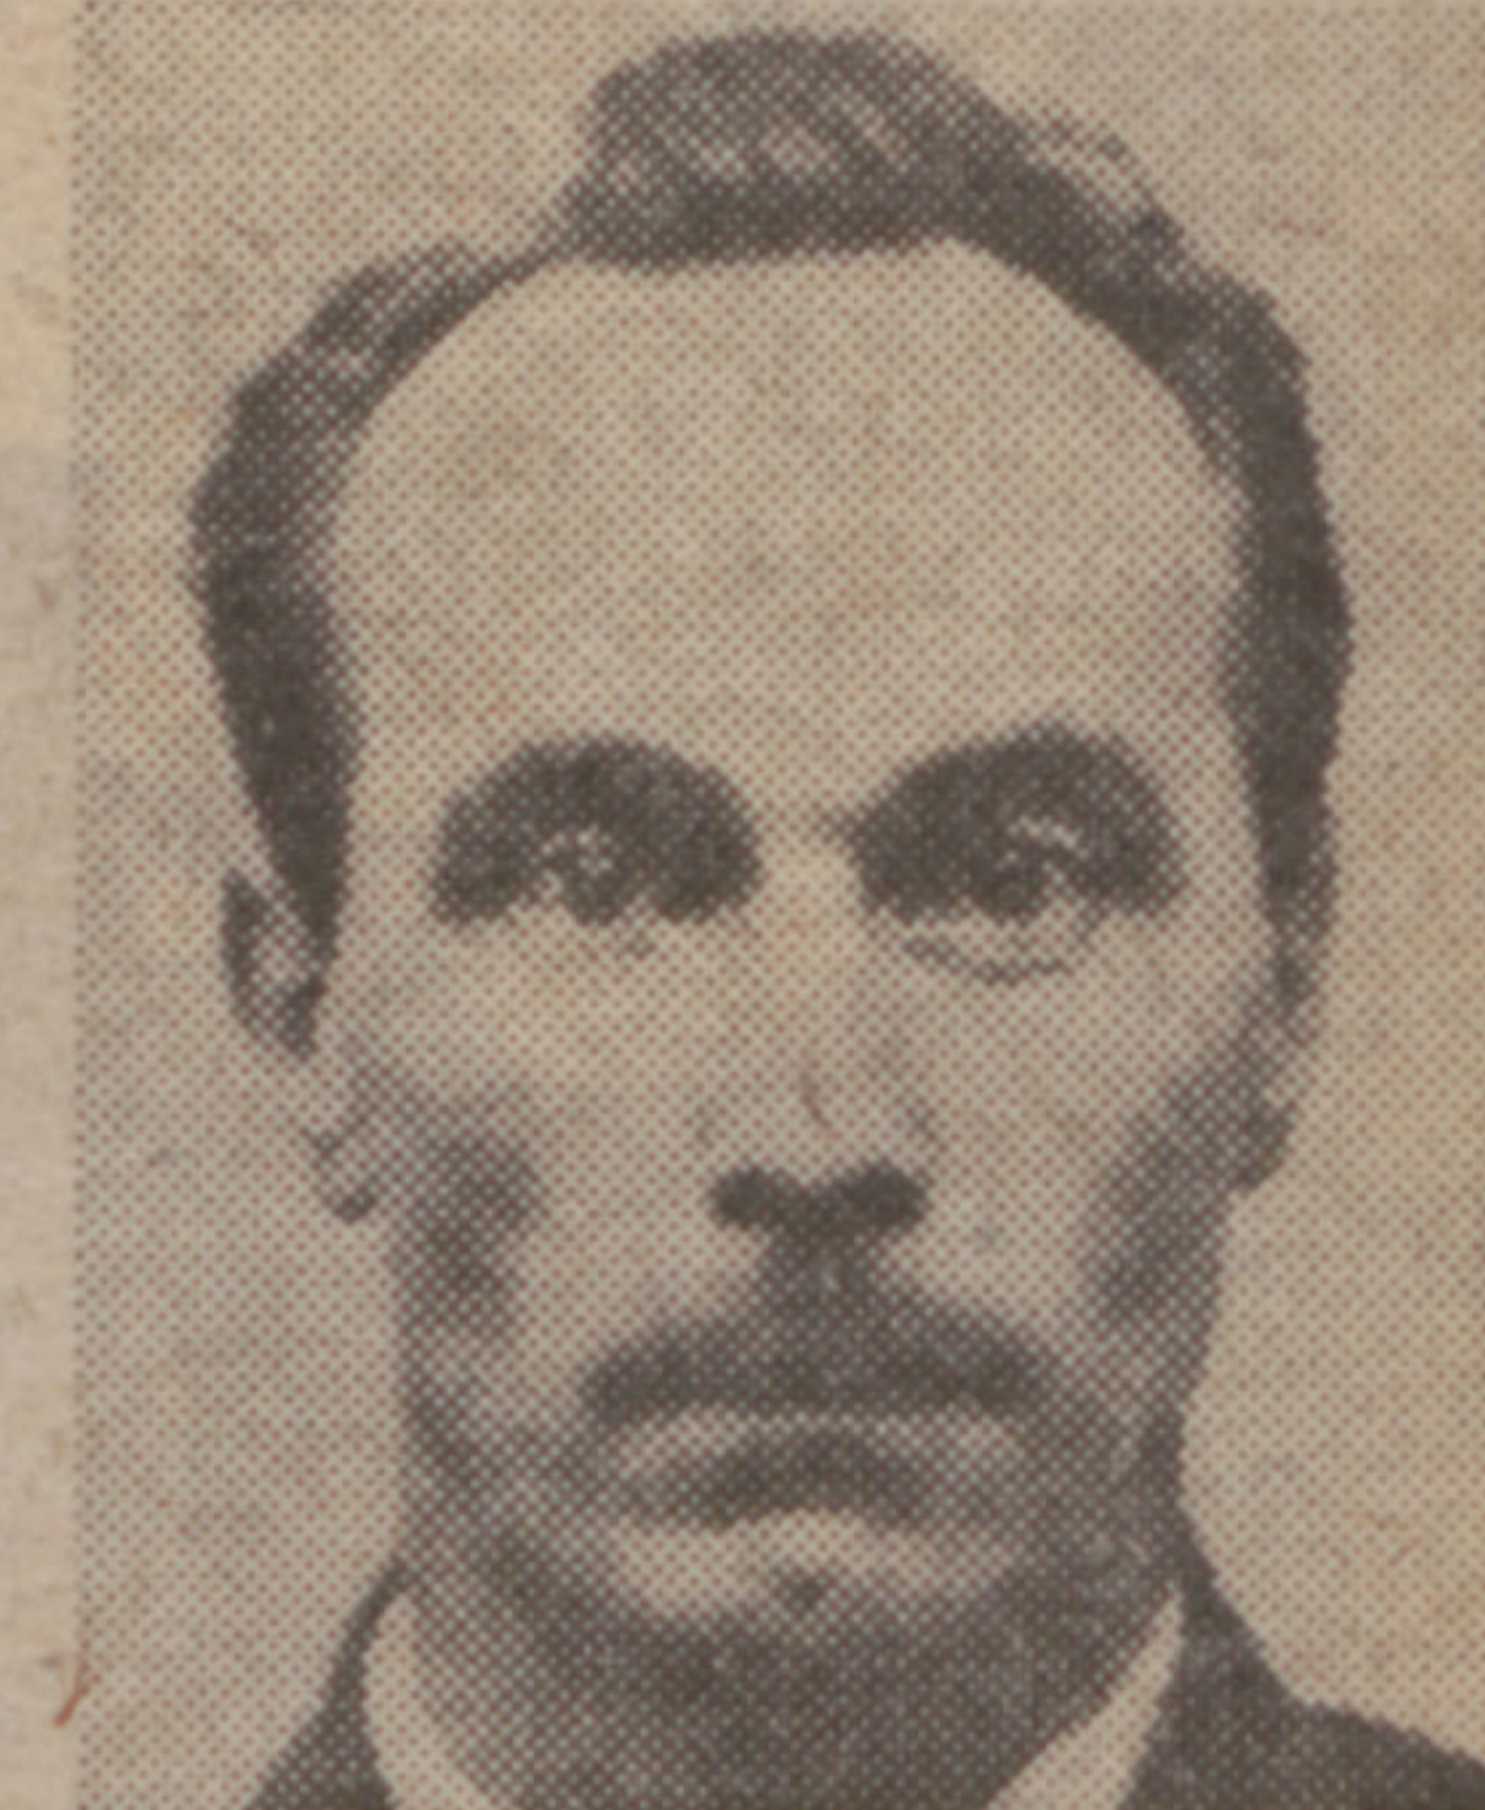

The other men are Bruce Richard Reynolds, 41, a motor and antique dealer, of Lonsdale-avenue, East Ham, and another Londoner, cafe proprietor James E. White, 43.

By HOWARD JOHNSON

JUST before midnight last night dozens of teams of detectives in London and the Home Counties were given special stand-by orders. They were told:

MOVE IN ON ALL TRAIN ROBBERY SUSPECTS.

Some of the teams were told not to swoop before dawn today.

And every squad of detectives in the big round-up was armed with search warrants.
