AP: NEWS FEATURES & INTERNAL COMMUNICATIONS

The News Features & Internal Communications collection includes news analysis, human interest stories, and entertainment and sports reporting from the 1940s forward. While News Features gave writers the freedom to explore the back story, address cultural happenings, and provide their own interpretations of events, internal communications allowed the Associated Press to tell its own story. This collection provides rare access to an array of internal AP publications dating from the turn of the century, offering invaluable insight into the AP, its staff, and the history of news coverage.

Internal communications include:
- AP World and other serial publications
- Personal papers of reporters and administrators
- Staff and company news
- Technological innovations
- Bureau histories
- Multiple editions of the AP Stylebook
- AP World Services
- Weekly tallies of the AP’s top stories

Among the most covered topics are crime, education, civil rights, environmental issues, immigration, urban affairs, sports, elections, and politics. With surprising frequency, regional stories turned into news of transcendent importance.

EUROPEAN BUREAUS COLLECTION
The European Bureaus Collection provides coverage of the twentieth-century's most influential international bureaus: Vienna, Geneva, Warsaw, Bern, Berlin, and Prague—as well as a special cross-bureau collection that covers conflicts and disorders that affected the whole of the continent. These records allow researchers to relive the news as it happened when they examine the original typescript carbons or wire copy, the firsthand accounts AP sent to its member newspapers, which members were then free to alter. Among the most covered topics are the WWII and post-war reconstruction, Nazism and its aftermath, the Cold War, espionage, the arms and space races, the fall of the Soviet Union, and many other events and movements that have left an indelible mark on history.

MIDDLE EAST BUREAUS COLLECTION
The Middle East Bureaus Collection offers access to the records from some of the AP's most active international bureaus, delivering the exclusive stories behind the headlines from 1967 to 2005. With stories stemming from Jerusalem, Ankara, Beirut and their surrounding areas, these records include news stories in the form of typescript carbons or wire copy, the version that AP sent on to its member newspapers, which members were free to alter. Among the most covered topics are military operations, civil and global wars, diplomacy, refugees, cultural clashes, and terrorism, providing dynamic, real-time insights into the second half of the twentieth century regarding issues of global importance that still impact the world today.
