This is the fully-searchable digital archive, allowing researchers and students to search the full text of over 950,000 pages of the newspaper’s backfile, from its first issue in 1855 to the end of 2000, including issues of The Sunday Telegraph from 1961 along with the various supplements. The value of this archive lies in its fascinating picture of politics, society and culture, giving a mix of news as it was experienced at the time.
OVER 140 YEARS OF NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL COVERAGE

Launched in 1855, by 1896 The Telegraph was the biggest-selling newspaper in the world. It is generally seen by press historians as the start of a new era of journalism, and marked the first step toward the mass-market style that has developed into rival newspapers like the Daily Mail. The Telegraph is one of the few newspapers to have noticeably and deliberately shifted its political standpoint, moving from its early left-leaning liberalism to a more right-leaning conservatism in the late 1870s, and in the 1850s and 1860s it expanded coverage into the arts, culture, and the sciences.
