Have you thought about digital resources for this topic?

Gale Primary Sources
Start at the source.

19th Century UK Periodicals
Part II: Empire: Travel and Anthropology, Economics, Missionary, and Colonial

Number of articles
Over 1.1 million

A Visit to Chu-hsien and Wan-hsien.

Having been asked to photograph the road at the above-named two stations of the Kanton, the Rev. A. T. Pritchard, writing on May 12th, informs us that he left the house at the ring, and, accompanied by his colleague, proceeded by the regular stage to Chu-hsien, which is about twenty miles distant from Hongkong.

Our spacious steamer bore with them their native buttery, Mr. Twycross, and also two native servants. We take up the Rev. Turner's narrative, at the point where he mentions the arrival at the party at Chu-hsien.

CHU-HSIEN.

"Chu-hsien is partly situated by the river-side, but part of the city runs up a small ridge of low mountains and the houses are built high up, outside the North Gate, on a steep street. Chu-hsien, being built away from the town in Kowloon by roofs to the hill-side, is a town.

"We had just arrived at the hotel, a low, but comfortable-looking one, in which we were hospitably entertained by the owner, when we received a note from the Rev. Turner, inviting us to the missionary residence, and to dinner."

"The party proceeded on their way until they reached the large city of Wan-hsien, which lies about six miles N. of Chu-hsien. They do not appear to have much water, and the town is not nearly so healthy as Chu-hsien."

EMPOWER™ RESEARCH
This digital archive is formed from a range of titles selected by a team of more than twenty editors, all of which are specialists in the field of 19th century studies. It looks at the role Britain played as an imperial power throughout the century, in which Britain extended its influence and reached new heights of Empire building. Titles in this archive span both British and international publications, giving researchers an overview of how events were reported on both sides.

For more information on this archive, visit gale.com/searchukperiodicals2