We are currently trialling this archive

British Library Newspapers
With England’s emergence as the dominant global power of the 19th century, newspapers began to experience a higher degree of freedom of the press. Newspapers of the time served not only documented historical, economic, and political events but also reflected social and cultural ideas, trends, and conflicts. The collection is made up of daily and weekly publications and reflects Britain’s growing role as a dominant power in the 19th-century world.