The Times is one of the world’s oldest continuously published newspapers, priding itself on being an establishment paper: “the newspaper of record”. With an audience covering world leaders to the general public, since its creation in 1785 readers have turned to The Times for its in-depth, award-winning coverage. It has reported extensively on international events for over 225 years, alongside its coverage of national news. With a strong focus on political events and analysis, The Times also reports on cultural affairs and social developments.

Generally regarded as a newspaper with high standards of journalism and accuracy in its reporting, public opinion of the paper has nevertheless varied over its lifetime.

A pioneer in its industry, The Times has made significant contributions to the development of both journalism and media history, notably as the first paper to hire a dedicated war correspondent. From 1986-2010 The Times expanded its sports and cultural coverage with the increase of weekend supplements, and also expanded the page count of individual issues, adding more content to the main section.
