Crucial to research related to processes and movements of decolonization are the voices of local players who helped forge their country’s new direction. In this collection of firsthand perspectives, researchers can explore decolonization as a historical process in which over 70 countries and territories emerged from colonial or imperial structures into independence.
BRING THE VOICES OF FORMERLY COLONIZED AND COMMONWEALTH PEOPLES TO THE FOREFRONT OF HISTORY

Decolonization: Politics and Independence in Former Colonial and Commonwealth Territories presents political ephemera and organizational material produced in over 70 previously colonized countries and territories during the twentieth century. Largely eschewing the accounts of colonizers, this wide-ranging collection helps researchers explore decolonization as a historical process sparked from within, specifically the changing or adapting of systems from an imposed imperial or colonial structure after 1945 and up to the present day. The archive sheds light on national political developments that followed decolonization and how former colonies negotiated their own agency and futures. Researchers can draw comparisons between different political movements within newly independent countries, as well as Commonwealth territories including Australia and Canada, discovering how and why self-rule developed differently in each region.
