Declassified Documents Online: Twentieth-Century British Intelligence

ABOUT THIS RESOURCE
Britain began the twentieth century with a vast global empire. The spheres of influence of the British government stretched from the UK and Ireland to mandates, protectorates and colonies in the Middle East and Africa, from the islands of the West Indies to British Malaya and Singapore in South East Asia, as well as to the sub-continent of India, and the self-governing Dominions of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa.
Declassified Documents: Twentieth Century British Intelligence allows researchers to explore the role of signals intelligence, human agents, diplomats, politicians and the armed forces...

The Joint Intelligence Committee (Germany) was set up after World War II to advise the British Commands and the Commanders-in-Chief on matters affecting the security of the United Kingdom. The committee was chaired by the Director of Intelligence and consisted of a joint team of British and German experts.

The committee met regularly to discuss matters affecting the security of the United Kingdom. The committee's advice was based on a combination of intelligence gathering, analysis, and the use of other sources of information. The committee's work was classified and the details of its meetings were kept secret.

The committee's meetings were attended by representatives from various government departments, including the Foreign Office, the Home Office, and the Ministry of Defence. The committee's work was supervised by the Director of Intelligence, who was responsible for ensuring that the committee's work was carried out in line with government policy and objectives.
